Sportsman Impaired By Bat

Dean 'Dingo' Morrison accidentally takes the sharpened handle of a new Peak Sports 'Rapier' cricket bat to the chest. Fortunately no damage was done and the offending weapon was de-fused and returned to Bob Cooke.

Toddlers who turn their noses up at spicy food from overseas could be branded racists by a Government-sponsored agency. The National Children's Bureau, which receives £12 million a year, mainly from taxpayer funded organisations, has issued guidance to play leaders and nursery teachers advising them to be alert for racist incidents among youngsters in their care. This could include a child of as young as three who says "yuk" in response to being served unfamiliar foreign food. The guidance by the NCB is designed to draw attention to potentially racist attitudes in youngsters from a young age. It alerts playgroup leaders that even babies cannot be ignored in the drive to root out prejudice as they can "recognise different people in their lives".

The 366-page guide for staff in charge of pre-school children, called Young Children and Racial Justice, warns: "Racist incidents among children in early years tend to be around name-calling, casual thoughtless comments and peer group relationships." It advises nursery teachers to be on the alert for childish abuse such as: "blackie", "Pakis", "those people" or "they smell". The guide goes on to warn that children might also "react negatively to a culinary tradition other than their own by saying 'yuk'". Staff are told: "No racist incident should be ignored. When there is a clear racist incident, it is necessary to be specific in condemning the action." Warning that failing to pick children up on their racist attitudes could instil prejudice, the NCB adds that if children "reveal negative attitudes, the lack of censure may indicate to the child that there is nothing unacceptable about such attitudes".

Nurseries are encouraged to report as many incidents as possible to their local council. The guide added: "Some people think that if a large number of racist incidents are reported, this will reflect badly on the institution. In fact, the opposite is the case." The guidance said that anyone who disagrees is racist themselves.

Author and researcher on family life Patricia Morgan said: 'This is interference in the lives of children. It smacks of totalitarianism. They intend nursery staff to step into playground squabbles and then report them to the local council as race incidents. Who would ever have thought that the anti-racism crusade would go so far?'

Now Where Are Those Keys ??

An elderly woman who had crawled under her car to look for her keys, ended up stuck beneath the axle for two days, until her postman noticed letters piling up, police said. 91 year old Betty Borowski of Greendale, Wisconsin, was found wedged under the back axle by local police.

The postman rang the doorbell and then asked a neighbour whether he had seen Ms Borowski lately. He hadn't, so they called the police.

Firefighters carefully lifted the car and removed the old girl who was dehydrated and confused.

"She was pretty well wedged in there. She must have gone in head first", said Police Chief Rob Dams.

She remained critical in intensive care for several days. Apparently her car keys were still in the car door, with her house key.

So this is the latest advice from Government. At least we know where we stand. Typical, really. Perhaps the same can be said about Ministers. Test tube experiments lacking any real substance. All piss and wind !!! Ex Parent

Whatever Happened To The Laughing Policeman ??

Scotland Yard's most prolific sharpshooter has been secretly awarded 5,000 pounds in damages for "hurt feelings" because a female police chief jokingly called him a "serial killer". The firearms officer - who is nicknamed "Killer" because of his prowess in shooting dead suspects in armed sieges - received the payout after the Metropolitan police decided that to defend the action at an employment tribunal would be a waste of public money. The expensive joke was made by Commander Sue Akers, a highly regarded Met officer who is in charge of Scotland Yard's fight against gun crime.... Akers's faux pas came at a social function when she introduced herself to the firearms officer with the words: "I've always wanted to meet the Met's very own serial killer."

The officer is a member of the elite CO19 firearms unit and has shot dead a number suspects in his career. Colleagues say he failed to see the funny side of her remarks. Akers was said to have been distraught at his reaction and later made a formal apology. However, "Killer" insisted his feelings had been hurt* and that he had been maligned. He filed a formal complaint about the joke and it was feared he might take legal action at a tribunal.

Ed: *not nearly as badly as his victims. It is quite evident that the breakdown of social etiquette and teamship is as crass as ever. What do the public feel about this complete garbage ?? Absolute balls !!!!

Stories From Around The World

Rumpy Pumpy On Dubai Beach

Michelle Palmer, manager of a publishing firm, was arrested after a police officer reportedly found her and a British holidaymaker in a coital position on Jumeirah Beach in the Arab state. The 30-year-old is thought to have been charged with having sex outside marriage - considered an offence in Dubai - as well as indecent behaviour in public, being drunk in public, and assaulting a police officer.

Miss Palmer told the Sun that she fears she will be 'made an example of' under the strict laws of a country where even mild public displays of affection are frowned upon. She and her fellow fornicator face a sentence of between three months and six years in jail in the state, one of seven that makes up the United Arab Emirates. She told the newspaper: "Because this is known everywhere they're going to make an example of us and we're going to get a higher sentence. "We are in so much trouble and my family and everybody are affected. I've got to go", she said.

Miss Palmer, is said to have been drinking champagne during an orgy with colleagues before agreeing to go for a walk on the beach with a hunky stud. When the pair were found having sex by a policeman, he is said to have let them off with a caution. However, later, after the couple were discovered with her legs over the stud's shoulders, they were arrested, and Miss Palmer is said to have become aggressive.

A Foreign Office spokesman said: "Two British nationals were arrested in Dubai. The case is currently under investigation." The Sun has exclusive rights to the story.

Clumsy Landing Tests Welders

Another unfortunate incident occurred when the Kalitta Air 0435 tried to land in vertical flight mode. The airline captain, unused to the fixed wing take off and landing, attempted to drop onto the runway like a Hawk Jump jet.

Pilot 'Dingbat' O'Reilly was immediately detained even though all 3 passengers escaped without serious injuries. Air investigator, Stig Blomqvist, said that it was a miracle that nobody was more seriously injured, and downed another schnapps.

Welders, working for Plummet Airlines, are hoping to have repair work finished in a week.

Are They All Barking Mad ??

Police sniffer dogs will have to wear booties when searching the homes of Muslims so as not to cause offence. Guidelines being drawn up by the Association of Chief Police Officers (Acpo) urge awareness of religious sensitivities when using dogs to search for drugs and explosives. The guidelines, to be published this year, were designed to cover mosques but have been extended to include other buildings.

Where Muslims object, officers will be obliged to use sniffer dogs only in exceptional cases. Where dogs are used, they will have to wear booties with rubber soles. "We are trying to ensure that police forces are aware of sensitivities that people can have with the dogs to make sure they are not going against any religious or cultural element within people's homes. It is being addressed and forces are working towards doing it," Acpo said.

Problems faced by the use of sniffer dogs were highlighted last week when Tayside police were forced to apologise for a crime prevention poster featuring a German shepherd puppy, in response to a complaint by a Muslim councillor. Islamic injunctions warn Muslims against contact with dogs, which are regarded as "unclean".

Police dogs at present are issued with footwear only at scenes of explosions to prevent them injuring their paws on broken glass.

Ibrahim Mogra, one of Britain's leading imams, said the measures were unnecessary: "In Islamic law the dog is not regarded as impure, only its saliva is. Most Islamic schools of law agree on that. If security measures require to send a dog into a house, then it has to be done. I think Acpo needs to consult better and more widely. "I know in the Muslim community there is a hang-up against dogs, but this is cultural. Also, we know British people like dogs; we Muslims should do our bit to change our attitudes."

John Midgley, co-founder of the Campaign Against Political Correctness, said: "The police are in effect being overly sensitive to potential criminals and not being sensitive enough to the public at large who need to be protected. These sort of things have a counter-productive effect because they cause huge friction between different communities."

Caroline Kisko, of the Kennel Club, said: "We would not condone any attempt to make search dogs wear special clothing, which could cause them distress."
